A new map for the music room

All three: 26 chapters in 7 stages; chapter 1 done (green), chapter 2 where you are (coral, with Clara); the fox's portrait at the start.

A

The townhouse

One tall Victorian house, cut open like a doll's house: a floor for each stage, a room for each chapter.

- Mansard roof in chequered slates, iron cresting, a turret with a king on top.
- Every floor sits on a cornice; each room has its wainscot.
- The front door at the bottom, the fox's portrait in the hall.
- Closest to today's map: the same order and taps, a new dress.

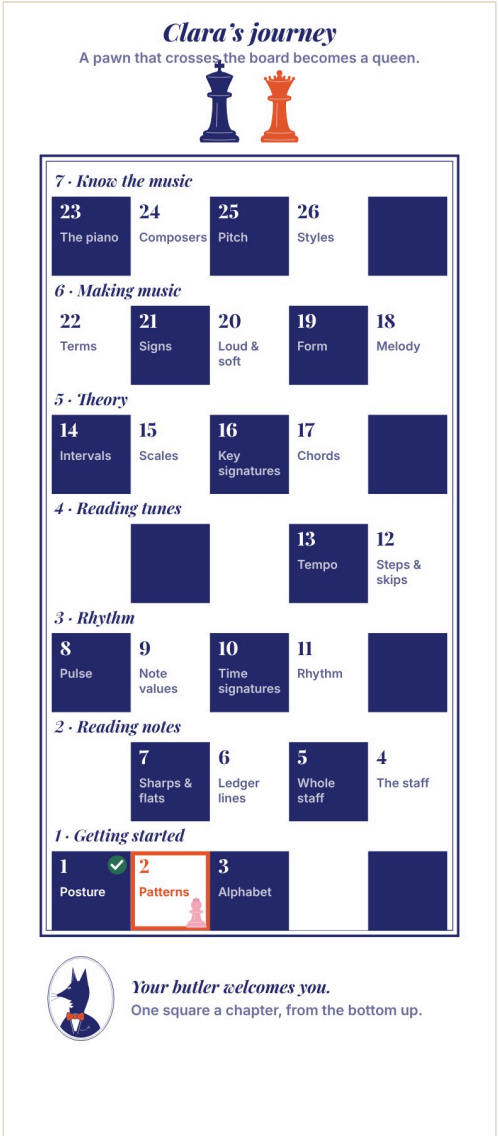

B

The street

A building for each stage, up a chequered street: Lodge, Library, Clock Tower, Conservatory, Academy, Theatre, Museum.

- Each window is a chapter.
- The richest world -- each stage has a place of its own.
- The longest scroll of the three.

C

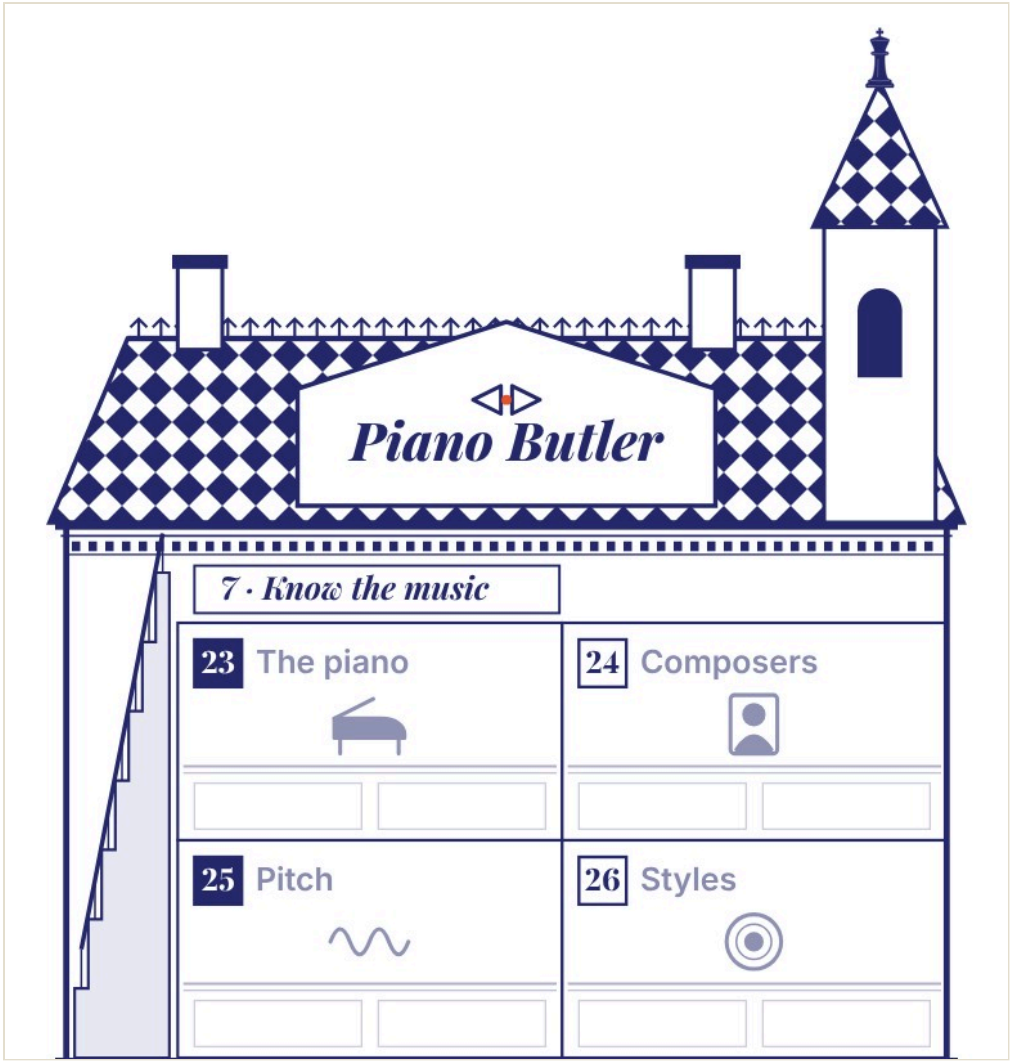

The board

Clara's journey: a rank for each stage, a square for each chapter, the King and Queen waiting at the far end.

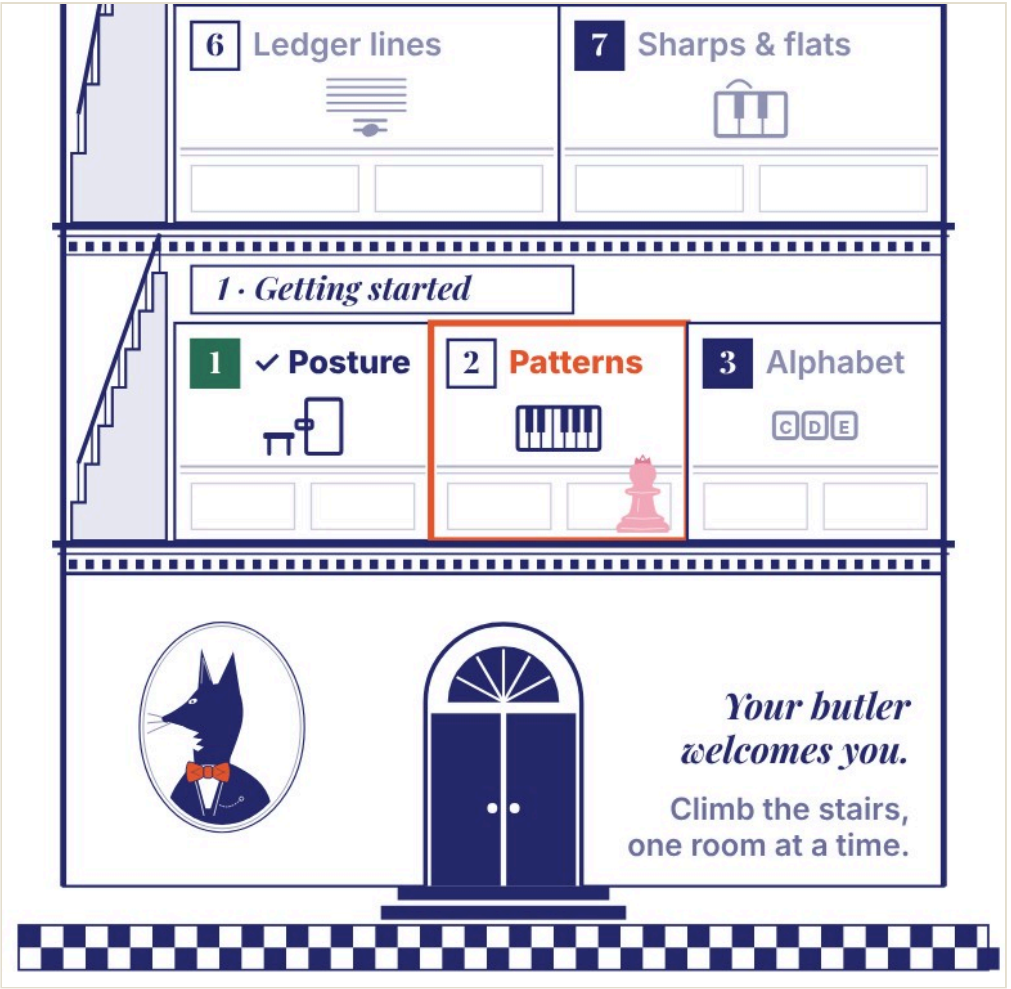

- A pawn that crosses the board becomes a queen.
- Fits on one screen -- your 'one sheet shows everything' rule.
- The most minimal; the chess theme at its plainest.

A · The townhouse, close up

The roof and the top floor; the ground floor and the front door.

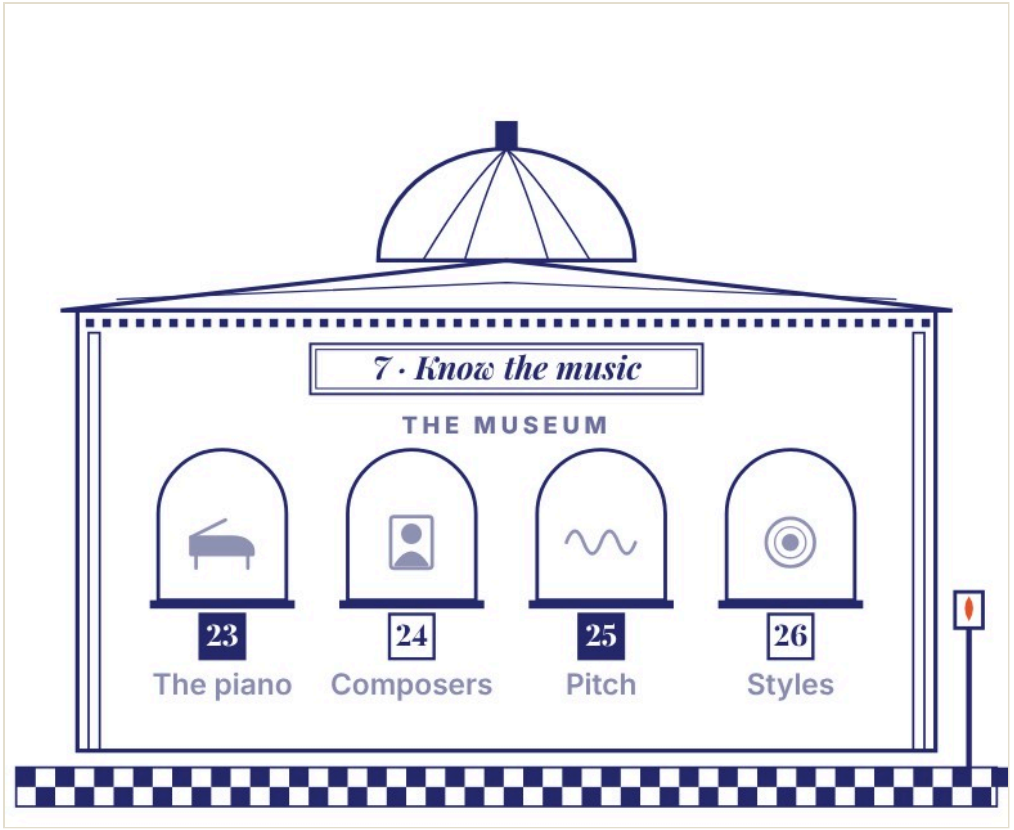

Chequered slates, cresting, the turret with the King, the dormer with the name and the bow tie; stage 7 on its cornice.

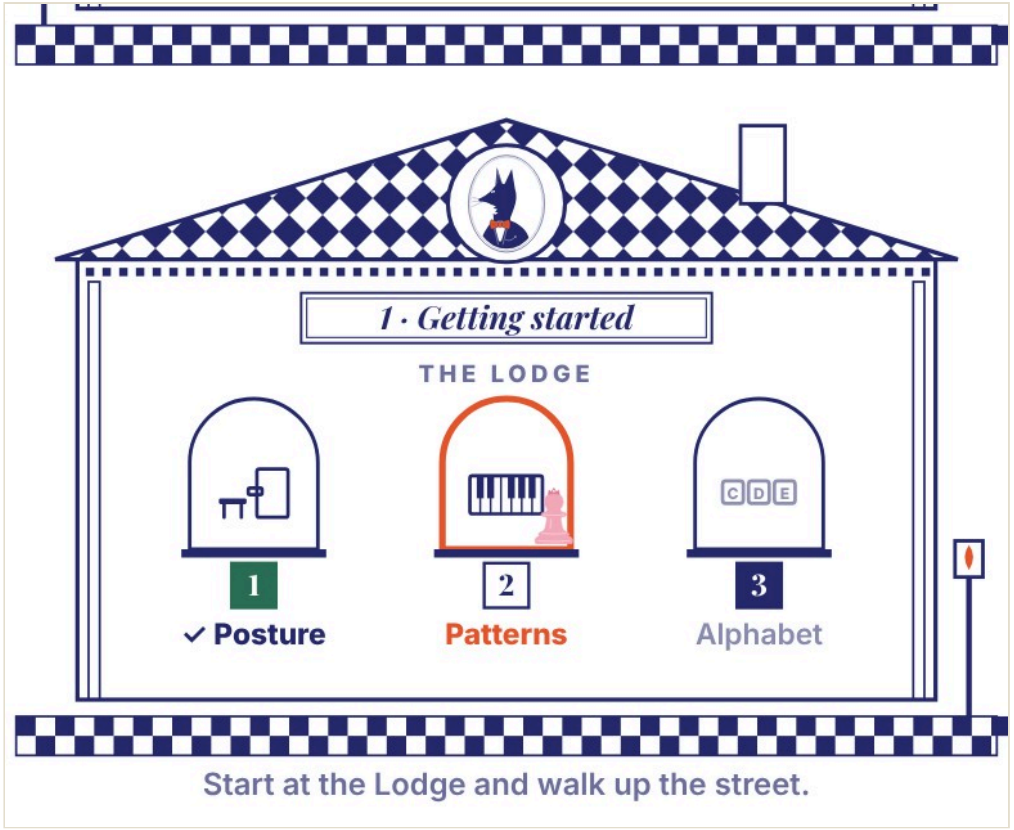

Stage 1: chapter 1 done, chapter 2 where you are (Clara in the room); the hall with the fox's portrait and the arched door.

B · The street, close up

The top of the hill and the bottom.

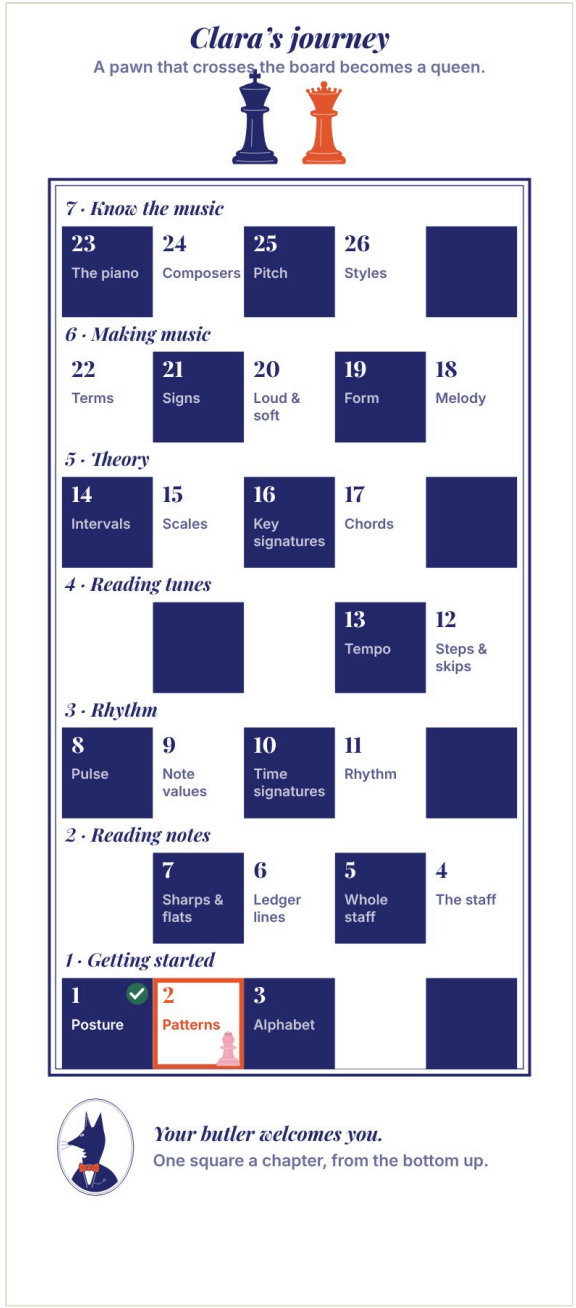

Stage 7, the Museum, with its dome; a lamppost on the street below.

Stage 1, the Lodge: the fox's portrait in the gable, Clara at the window of chapter 2.

C · The board, full size

As it would sit on a phone: the whole journey on one screen.

How it reads. Start at the bottom left; each rank goes the other way (like a snake); the numbers show the order. Squares are chapters; empty squares are just the board.

Later, at the studio. The same board on a real chessboard: Clara's pawn moves one square for every chapter finished.
